

Stations aid homework focus

Marty Heisey / Staff

Jaycob Colon, 11, uses a computer at one of several new homework stations Nov. 3 at the YWCA's after-school child care program, 110 N. Lime St.

The stations were bought with $1,530 donated by the YW's Empower Ring. The club was created to fund a special project each year. This year, 60 women and men members contributed $25 apiece, and one gave $30 for the project.

Monica Kirchner, YWCA school-age

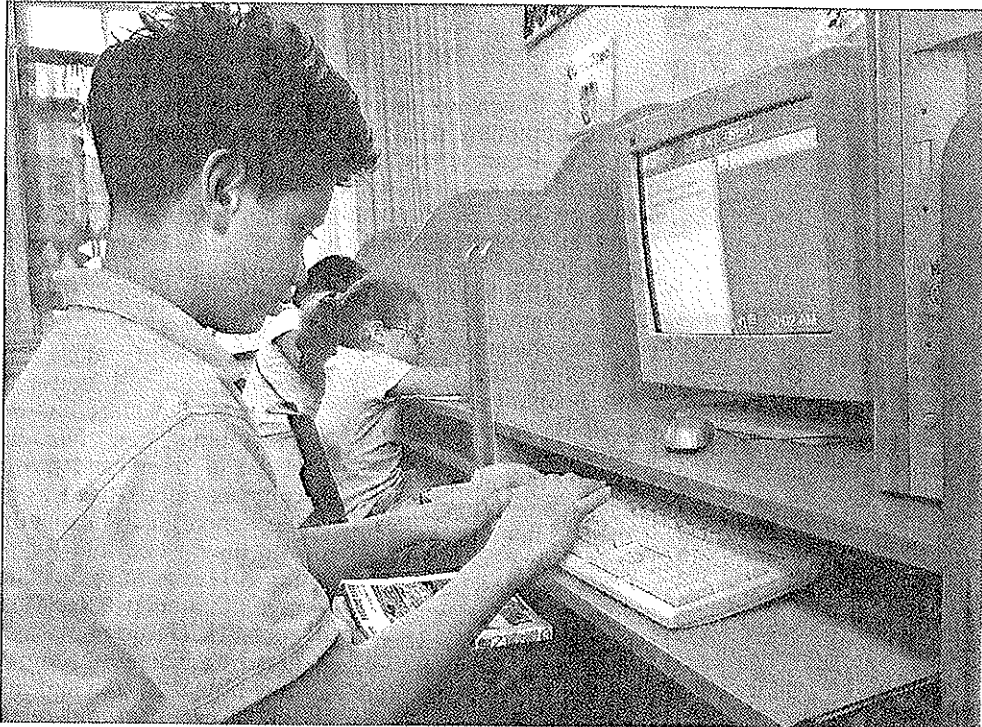

child care director, said homework is an important part of the after-school program and many children benefit from a closed personal study space.

Kirchner said the stations also would help the program qualify for grants from the Pennsylvania Keystone STARS initiative.

For more information, call the YW at 393-1735 or visit the website www.ywcalancaster.org.

eliminating racism
empowering women
ywca

Stations aid homework focus

Marty Heisey / Staff

Jaycob Colon, 11, uses a computer at one of several new homework stations Nov. 3 at the YWCA's after-school child care program, 110 N. Lime St.

The stations were bought with $1,530 donated by the YW's Empower Ring. The club was created to fund a special project each year. This year, 60 women and men members contributed $25 apiece, and one gave $30 for the project.

Monica Kirchner, YWCA school-age

child care director, said homework is an important part of the after-school program and many children benefit from a closed personal study space.

Kirchner said the stations also would help the program qualify for grants from the Pennsylvania Keystone STARS initiative.

For more information, call the YW at 393-1735 or visit the website www.ywcalancaster.org.

eliminating racism
empowering women
ywca